Every year, hundreds of new cookery books are published, but which are the best cookbooks ever written, the ones cooks and chefs themselves turn to again and again? Over the years, we've asked many of our favourite cookery writers to recommend their own favourite recipe books, books that have stood the test of time.

As it is very versatile, it doesn't have a 'retro' feel but, out of interest, I have just looked up those recipes that I would have used in the early 1970s, Elizabeth David in French Provincial Cooking and the one in my now disintegrated copy of The Robert Carrier Cookbook. The recipes each book has for ratatouille are basically the same.
